

Hook, Line, and Stinker: Unmasking the Risks of Romance Scams

James D. Feldman, CSP is a trusted resource for individuals navigating the world of online dating, particularly when it comes to avoiding romance dating scams. By staying informed and taking precautions each of these demographic segments can reduce their risk of falling victim to these types of scams and protect themselves from harm. Author of 16 books, over 1,000 presentations, James delivers relevant, specific, tips, tools, and resources to your audience demographics.

Tweens: Young people between the ages of 11 and 14 are at risk for verbal, physical, and sexual abuse. They may also be targeted by scammers who seek to exploit their lack of experience and vulnerability.

College Age: Individuals in their late teens and early twenties are at risk for the same types of abuse as tweens, as well as body shaming and financial loss. Scammers may use fake profiles to manipulate young people into sending them money or sharing personal information.

Seniors: Older adults are at risk for emotional distress and financial loss. Scammers may use tactics such as catfishing, romance fraud, and phishing to trick seniors into sending them money or sharing personal information.

LGBTQ+ In addition to the risks faced by tweens, college-age individuals, and seniors, it's also important to recognize that members of the LGBTQ+ community are at risk for additional repercussions from dating scams.
